
EDITORIAL

Man Society and Social Life

Man is a social animal and traditionally, he has a close relationship with society. As he takes his first breath on the earth, or better to say when his inception starts, he gets himself associated with society. It is an abstract relationship before birth, which shows its impact after birth through activities. Throughout life, a man has to follow the basic rules of life, and it will be better to say that the real meaning of life and modes of behavior are obtained only by following rules, regulations and norms established by the particular society.

The meaning of social life is shaped by the interaction between a person and the environment (PE relationship). Although every action is decided by the nature of the individual, constraints and situational requirements, fundamentals of behavior are found to be more or less the same because almost the same situation produces almost the same behavior and individual differences cause the hairline variation in behavior that appears.

It is an old saying in the psychological world that a man, when he comes first into the world, his mind is like a tabula rasa (plain slate) upon which anything (experience) can be written. As he grows older and comes in contact with family, peers and other members of the social surroundings, he gets ample experiences that make him experienced and they provide skills to deal with environmental demands. It means to say that the bond between man and society is significant and its significant relationship cannot be denied.

In order to study this bond of man and society relationship, this journal was started and is running successfully with your cooperation. We are dedicated to serving this relationship through this academic endeavor and hope that this journal will touch the highest peak of academia with your valuable help and cooperation.

Aradhana Shukla
Anubhuti Dubey
Basant Kumar Soneber