

---

EDITORIAL

Human being and Social Life

Man is a social being and as a human he can not live without society and social interaction. Therefore, man's life to, an enormous extent a group life and it revolves around his / her surroundings. The relationship between man and society can be understood by the fact that man is always known by his relationships with the others.

The role of society is clarified when we consider the process by which they develop in the life of the individual in terms of various activities, meeting with people and going to various places. They are important for person and they are required to define the human life. The nature of each component differs for each person according to his /, her thought, feeling and circumstances. In this way, it is surely fair to say that the relationship between man and society are interdependent and it can be changed according to the need of the hour.

Man and society both run through the mind of human, in particular and the society, in general. Our journal deals with the mind and behaviour of man and society in all walks of life as experienced theoretically or empirically. We invite all domains of knowledge where behavior can be experienced or at least felt. We regard the senior intellectual's teachers and professionals as well as the budding researchers .Please join us and your contribution here will be highly solicited.

Aradhana Shukla
Anubhuti Dubey
Basant Kumar Sonber